KISSING THE BRIDE.

"Well, old fellow, I need hardly say how "Well, old fellow, I need hardly say how pleased I am to see you again. When did you come back?"

"Only last evening. You know that I have no immediate friends or relatives to be anxious about me, so I thought I would stay in town for a few days on the chance of coming across some one I knew, and, as luck would have it, I have met you."

"Just in the nick of time to fulfill your long-made promise."

"What was that? for I must plead guilty of having forgotten it."

"I am going to be married next week and you know it was always a bargain be ween us that you should support me on that occasion."

"Yes, I recollect. Well, let me offer my

"Yes, I recollect. Well, let me offer my hearty congratulations. Who is the lady?" "The eldest daughter of Sir John Gra-ham, and the dearest little girl in the 'Cela va sans dire,' " laughed Charles

"'Cela va sans dire,' " laughed Charles Medcaif.

"And her name is Enid." continued Captain Lane, without heeding the interruption. "We have only known each other six months. I met her first at my godmother's, Lady Martyn, and I think we both fell in love with each other at first sight. There, you have the whole story." Medcaif had just returned from South Africa, where he had held a lucrative appointment, being a junior partner in a large firm of engineers.

"Have you succumbed during your travels to the fascination of some fair one, or do you still hold the sex in abhorence?" asked the captain.

"Scarcely that," replied Medcaif, flushing a dull red beneath his bronze, "But I nave never come across my ideal except in a picture."

"Ah I always said you were a rememble."

"Ah, I always said you were a romantic

"Ah, I always said you were a romantic fellow, notwithstanding your boasted stoicism. I am curious to know the story." It was three years ago-just before I went abroad—one Sunday afternoon in Kensington gardens. I was with Jack Donmore—you remember him? We had been sitting there some time criticising the multitude, when Jack left me to speak to an acquaintance he recognized in the distance. "Just then my eye was caught by the face of a girl passing, it was my very ideal! Neither fair nor dark, but with a happy combination of the two. It was not that she was strictly beautiful, but she had a fascination for me that I could be helder resist, nor can I describe it.

"Presently I saw Jack returning, and at the same moment the girl rose. She was with two others, and as they moved away something feli out of her lap. I hastened to pick it up. Her back was turned and by some hasty impulse I slipped it in my pocket. My treasure proved to be a treasure indeed, for it was a photograph of my darling. Yes, it had come to that, I think of her still as that, though I left England next day and have been away three years." Let me complete the tale," added Can-next day and have been away three years." "Let me complete the tale," added Captain Lane, slyly, "Your task is now to find the fair unknown and to lay your heart and fortune at her feet. Joking apart, old fellow, I fear you will have a difficulty th accomplishing your object. But talking about photographs, let me show you Ends.

Captain Lane detached a locket which Captain Lane detached a locket which Cangled at the end of his watch chain, end opening it displayed the miniature of his lady love, which he offered for his friend's inspection, It was well that Gerard Lane had not a

It was well that Gerard Lane had not a full view of the other's face just at that moment, he having turned his back half round in order to get a better light on the portrait; for, as his eyes rested on it Medcalf started violently and turned ghastly pale—it was the pictured face of his ideal, the fellow to which even now lay next his heart.

"She is very lovely." he managed to stammer, as with a trembling hand he restammer, as with a trembling hand he re-turned the locket. And then he had to listen patiently while the captain descanted on the many virtues of the original. He declined, however, his urgently prossed He declined, however, his urgently prossed invitation to join his party at the theater, on the plea of feeling tired after his travels, and it was with relief that he found himself at last in his own room.

When a week later, however, Captain Lane called on him to fulfill his promise on the wedding day, the temptation of seeing, nay more, of speaking to—the girliust once was too much.

ing. nay more, of speaking to—the girl just once was too much.

It would be difficult to say which was the more nervous, the bridegroom-elect or his best man, as they waited in the church for the arrival of the bridal party. Not once during the ceremony that followed did Medcalf glance at the bride, though his pulses were thrilling at the sound of the sweet, clear voice that made the responses which bound her to Captain Lane.

It was in the vestry after the signatures had been duly entered in the register that someone whispered in his ear:

"Come, old fellow, don't you know your duty? Kiss the bride."

Then he radsed his eyes, which rested for one brief moment on his ideal. The hext moment he had gravely bent and pressed his lips on the cheek of the dainty vision beside him.

There was a little titter as the girl gave vent to a little exclamation of surprise.

"The bride, man." That's not the bride."

Then, for the first time, Medcalf looked about and his wandering gaze fell on the apparition of the bride.

In puzzled wonder he turned once more to his neighbor—she and the bride were filke as two pens. Which was his ideal?

Well, it mattered not, since one was free. It was not until years after, when Charlie found the courage to tell his wife the story of that purloined photo, that he discovered that he had married his ideal after all, and bot her twin sister.
